Quinn, executive director of the Commission. It is expected that they will be ready in time to stock with breeder bream and bass. This will mean that five of the eight ponds for which the Commission has set up funds will be finished, with three more to go.

CONSUMER SPENDING AND SAVING SHOW CONFIDENCE IN OUTLOOK

Whatever uncertainty may have been felt by some of the experts, the American people as a whole, by their everyday spending and saving decisions in a year of economic readjustment, have given the nation an outstanding example of calmness and confidence in the outlook.

This confidence has been paralleled in business and industrial circles, where it has been reflected in the maintenance of near peak levels in plant and equipment investment and new records in construction outlays.

Two of the major results of this steadiness in the public's behavior pattern in the period are:

Total consumer spending has been maintained at record levels. Aggregate personal consumption expenditures were estimated at a seasonably adjusted annual rate of $231.5 billions for the second quarter of this year by the Council of Economic Advisors. This is the highest quarterly rate on record and, on an annual basis, nearly $2 billions above the total for 1953. The magnitude of this consumer demand has been providing the economy with a powerful prop while it was undergoing readjustment and laying the foundation for new growth.

At the same time, the people as a whole have kept on adding to their savings in life insurance and other forms of long-term thrift the bedrock of their personal security, at the highest figure attained in the last eight years. Total accumulated long-term savings of individuals have been growing at an annual rate of approximately $12 billions this year, duplicating the 1953 performance. The aggregate of such savings at midyear was estimated at around $212 billions, the equivalent of some $4,500 for every household in the land.

The consumer spending pattern over the last year is reminiscent of a similar performance in the short-lived recession of 1949. At that time, too, personal consumption expenditures continued to increase while production declined and unemployment rose. What is happening this time is an even more significant demonstration of public confidence since pent-up demand as a result of shortages built-up during World War II was a potent influence on consumer spending attitudes in 1949 and doesn't exist today.

The personal savings record in the present period is much more impressive than the one five years ago. Accumulated long-term savings of individuals increased only $7 billions in 1949, or little more than half the current growth in the people's "nest egg." These savings consist of funds accumulated behind life insurance policies, thrift accounts in commercial banks, deposits in mutual savings banks and in Postal Savings, savings capital in saving and loan associations, the current redemption value of U. S. Savings Bonds owned by individuals.

"Goodness! What next?"

MAMA'S amazement at daughter's "new fashioned light", 75 years ago, was quite understandable. For it was truly a far cry from the kerosene lamp and flickering gas light. But if someone had answered her question of "What next?", her amazement would have turned to incredulity . . . for only a handful of people could envision the uses of electricity to come.

Today, as we consider the applications of electricity that have come since Edison's invention of the first practical incandescent lamp, we, too, may ask . . . what next? For though electricity is now so interwoven with the fabric of everyday living that few of us give it conscious thought, the potential has not yet been reached.

So long as America's privately owned electric industry remains free to advance, invent, invest and improve . . . the miracles of electricity will continue to grow. Great as the role of electricity is in our own lives, it will be even greater in the lives of our children and our children's children.

WINTER GRAZING PROGRAM WILL UP FARM PROFITS

A winter grazing program will provide at least 60 days more grazing in all sections of the state, and 90 to 100 days more in the Coastal Plains area.

That's the word from John F. Saunders, associate agronomist at VPI, who points out that now is the time to think about winter cover crops.

One acre of a well-fertilized cover using small grain, rye grass, and crimson clover, will produce 600 to 800 pounds of protein and provid grazing for 5 to 6 cows per acre for several weeks.

Probably equally as important as the winter pasture angle is the reduction in the loss of plant food.

Shoulders says at least half of the peanut, corn, cotton, and soy- en is demonstrating excellent liv- ability and hardiness, fast growth, good feathering and a low feed conversion.

Westmoreland's hatchery operation turns out about 13,000 chickens per week. 5,000 of them are the white-crossed "Virginians" with which he has been experimenting for a year. As yet he doesn't have sufficient figures accumulated on growth, feed conversion, dressing characteristics and such to make his findings officially conclusive, but the former automobile dealer is extremely enthusiastic of his and time- results to date.

Westmoreland county agent S. J. Dawson confirmed Westmoreland's opinions. Dawson noted that there is "a definite trend toward white chickens in Virginia because they have a more attractive carcass." He explained that the "Virginian" has an even "bigger breast" than the regular white chickens.

Dawson observed that Westmoreland operates the only full - time hatchery in the Northern Neck, although "there has been a tremendous interest in small flocks here in the last three years."

DON'T LOOK NOW

A prominent lady judge of Ohio who hears from 80 to 120 traffic cases a day opines that distraction causes about 75 per cent of all traffic crashes. Distractions noted were window shopping, looking at pretty girls, settling squabbles among children on the back seat, head swivelling conversations with passengers and lighting cigarettes.

CHEMISTRY PLAYS IMPORTANT ROLE IN AGRICULTURE

Chemistry plays an important role in agriculture.

VPI specialists report a few facts to back up this claim.

Apple tree tests made in Pennsylvania showed unsprayed trees yielded only 2 bushels each; sprayed trees gave 11 bushels each.

Cattle on the average are 50 pounds heavier, give 15 to 20% greater milk yields, when relieved of insects by chemicals.

Corn yield per acre has increased 25% in a generation through chemicals and genetics.

Tomato blight cut eastern crops in half in 1946, sent prices soaring. Chemical sprays have returned the yields and prices to normal.

Develop New Hybrid Chick

A new "white cross" hybrid chicken called "The Virginian" promises to be a leading contender in the poultryman's search for the "chicken-tomorrow." The chicken, a cross between a pure-bred, broad-breasted Cornish Rooster and a White Rock Hen, was developed by Westmoreland county hatcheryman, L. E. Westmoreland.

New in this section of the country, the cross has been experimented with successfully in New England. Its main assets are excellent quality meat with short meaty legs and an extra large breast.

According to Westmoreland and other breeders who are raising flocks of the "Virginians," the chicken is demonstrating excellent livability and hardiness, fast growth, good feathering and a low feed conversion.

IFYE Delegates Due to Arrive

Virginia's 1954 International Farm Youth Exchange program is getting into full swing.

By the end of next week four foreign visitors will begin an extended stay on Virginia farms. They are: Miss Margaret Martin, Northern Ireland, who arrived on Friday, August 20; Seppo Olavi Kanervisto, Finland, due Friday, August 27; Fernando Boso Vargas, Costa Rica, and Miss Elizabeth Aebi, both scheduled to arrive Thursday, September 2.

All of them will stay until early October. Returned last week from Costa Rica was Dominic Lay, Fairfax 4-H'er. Scheduled to leave Virginia September 11, also under the IFYE program, is Miss Edith Frame, of Quinton, who will go to New Zealand.

Dr. James A. Duncan, older rural youth specialist at VPI, who is in charge of the IFYE program in Virginia, explains that IFYE is not a work program, nor a technical aid, academic exchange, or tourist program—but a "two-way street to understanding a way of life of others." The delegates in America are given an opportunity to learn the American way of life by living it with families here. The cost of the program is met by voluntary contributions to the National 4-H Club Foundation and to state IFYE funds through the Agricultural Extension Service. No government money is used.

Virginians now abroad include: Joe Campbell, of Russell, in the Netherlands; Wilda Jean Adams, of Frederick, in Finland; and John Thomas, of Brunswick, in Equador.
